Dear Professor Zavella:

I am pleased to inform you that Cornell University Press was recently awarded a grant by the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH) to make fifty-seven outstanding out-of-print humanities titles in anthropology, classics, political science, and literary criticism freely accessible to a global audience as ebooks. Your title, Women's Work and Chicano Families (1987), has been selected for inclusion in this program.

Now in its second year, the Humanities Open Book Program, jointly sponsored by the NEH and the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, funded proposals from eight university presses following a rigorous review process that evaluated the methodologies for selection and the intellectual significance of the titles. The funding will be used for clearing rights on the selected titles, digitizing the printed versions of the works, and making them discoverable on the open web as ebooks at no charge under a Creative Commons license. In addition, to supplement the availability of the digital edition, we will also create a print-on-demand paperback.

Working closely with our colleagues from the Cornell University Library and a group of distinguished scholars, we based our decisions on library circulation data from the last several years and on the work's intellectual contributions to the field. We are excited about adding these open access titles.

Should you have questions about anything contained herein please don't hesitate to ask.

Sincerely,

Dean J. Smith, Director
